Solutions for the future SEDA

Moving to Mainstream is an initiative of the Australian Building Energy Council, proudly sponsored by the Australian Greenhouse Office and presented by The Meetings Manager Pty Ltd.

Speakers and Tour Dates

Brenda and Robert Vale have worked on the design of autonomous buildings for over thirty years and completed the first Autonomous House in the United Kingdom in 1993. The Australian Financial Review has called them 'Europe's leading Ecologically Sustainable Development experts'.

The Vales are joined by the cream of Australia's award winning home designers, each presenting the very latest and best in climate responsive design (see below).

The Moving to Mainstream public seminars will take place in every capital city, as well as regional centres:

City	Date	Co-Presenters

The Seminars

Following the sell-out success of the 2001 'House With No Bills' seminar tour, internationally renowned architects Brenda and Robert Vale return to Australia with fresh ideas on environmentally sustainable home design.

Entertaining, innovative and informative, the 'Moving to Mainstream' public seminar series promotes the benefits and showcases cutting edge examples of dwellings that minimise energy costs and environmental impact.

A team of international, national and local award-winning designers share their first-hand experiences of designing and building innovative and attractive houses that are better for their users and the planet.

Topics Covered

The seminars take you on a detailed tour of three built houses that provide stylish and comfortable living conditions whilst minimising the need for mechanical services.

If you are building, buying or renovating a home, this is a great opportunity to learn practical solutions to key environmentally sustainable design problems. Some issues include:

- solar passive design
- materials use
- water use
- energy use
- indoor air quality

Surprise yourself by witnessing first-hand how environmental homes are beautiful homes - cool, cosy, and perfect for our modern lifestyle.
